

THREE-LEVEL LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT PATHWAY

Corework Leadership Pathway

Build the leadership capability required at each level of responsibility.

Leadership changes as responsibility grows. Managing people directly requires different capabilities than leading through other managers. Senior leaders face another shift as their decisions, influence, and accountability extend across functions and the enterprise.

The Corework Leadership Pathway gives organizations a deliberate way to prepare people for those transitions through cohort-based development tied to the work leaders are actually responsible for.

Leadership development should prepare people for the work that changes as responsibility grows.

When Leadership Development Needs a Clearer Path

Organizations often invest in leadership development without creating a clear progression from one level of responsibility to the next. New managers may enter the role without a strong foundation. Experienced managers may struggle when their success begins to depend on other leaders. Senior leaders may need to expand beyond functional expertise into broader enterprise judgment.

What do leaders need to be able to do differently as their responsibility grows?

Designed For

The Leadership Pathway may be a fit when:

- You are promoting strong individual contributors into management
- Leadership expectations vary significantly across levels or teams
- Development programs feel disconnected from the work leaders actually do
- You want a clearer pipeline for preparing people for greater responsibility

LEVEL II

LEVEL III

Enterprise Leadership

Senior directors and emerging executives

One Pathway. Three Levels of Leadership.

Each level is built around a different leadership transition. Organizations can begin with the level where the need is greatest or build toward a broader multi-level pathway.

LEVEL I

Managing People

New and emerging managers

Build the foundational capability people need when they become responsible for the performance of others.

- Step into the manager role with clearer expectations and accountability
- Get work done through people through delegation, prioritization, communication, and decision-making
- Develop and manage performance through feedback, coaching, and performance conversations
- Build a stronger team through clearer norms, trust, consistency, and shared accountability

LEVEL II

Leading Through Others

Experienced managers and leaders of managers

Strengthen the ability to translate priorities through other leaders, develop management capability, and lead consistently across teams.

- Translate priorities through managers rather than carrying the work personally
- Develop stronger management capability in the leaders they oversee
- Create greater consistency across teams while preserving appropriate judgment
- Lead through a broader span of responsibility and influence

LEVEL III

Enterprise Leadership

Senior directors and emerging executives

Build the judgment, cross-functional influence, talent leadership, and enterprise perspective required as leadership scope expands.

- Strengthen enterprise judgment beyond functional expertise
- Lead and influence across organizational boundaries
- Take greater responsibility for talent and leadership capability
- Operate with a broader enterprise perspective as scope and accountability expand

How the Pathway Works

Each level is built around the work leaders are responsible for at that stage. Participants learn a small set of practical approaches, apply them to real work, return with actual experience, and adjust based on what happened.

Learn → Apply → Reflect → Adjust

For private cohorts, Corework works with the sponsor to understand the leadership population, current expectations, and operating context so the experience reflects the organization's reality.

The goal is leadership development that changes how people actually lead in practice.

What Client Participation Looks Like

- A sponsor who helps define the leadership population and organizational context
- Participants who attend cohort sessions and apply the work between sessions
- Access to the expectations, language, or priorities that should shape contextual tailoring

What the Organization Gets

- Facilitated cohort-based development matched to the leadership level
- Practical tools tied to real leadership responsibilities
- Structured application to real leadership situations
- Sponsor insight into recurring leadership challenges and development priorities

Managing People

Build the foundational capability people need when they become responsible for the performance of others.

Strong individual contributors do not automatically become strong managers. The transition into people management changes the job. Success increasingly depends on the ability to create clarity, make good decisions through others, develop people, address performance, and build a team that can deliver without depending on the manager for everything.

------------------------------	---------------------------	----------------------------------	----------------------------

The Four Essential Jobs of the Manager

01

Step Into the Manager Role

Understand what changes when success increasingly depends on other people. Clarify the manager's role in setting expectations, establishing accountability, making judgments, and creating the conditions for performance.

02

Get Work Done Through People

Build stronger habits around delegation, prioritization, communication, decision-making, role clarity, and creating ownership without becoming the bottleneck.

03

Develop and Manage Performance

Strengthen feedback, coaching, performance conversations, early identification of performance issues, and the ability to support development while maintaining accountability.

04

Build a Strong Team

Create clearer team norms, trust, consistency, communication, and shared accountability while learning to navigate the tradeoffs that come with leading people.

Built for Your Context, Without Rebuilding the Curriculum

For private organizational cohorts, Corework begins with a short sponsor discovery process to understand the manager population, organizational expectations, current pressures, language, and operating context. That information helps tailor examples, cases, emphasis, and application while the core Managing People curriculum remains intact.

What the Organization Receives

- Four facilitated live cohort sessions
- Participant tools and application resources
- Structured workplace practice between sessions
- Contextual tailoring based on sponsor discovery

Sponsor Insight

- End-of-cohort sponsor readout
- Recurring manager challenges and participation themes
- Observations useful for future leadership-development planning
- A repeatable foundation for first-line manager development

WHERE LEVEL I FITS

Managing People is the first level of the Corework Leadership Pathway. Organizations can deploy Level I on its own or use it as the first stage of a broader leadership-development pathway.

Leading Through Others

Strengthen the ability to lead through other managers, translate priorities across teams, and build stronger management capability below you.

The move from managing individual contributors to leading through other managers changes the work again. Leaders at this level have to create clarity without carrying every decision themselves, strengthen the managers they oversee, translate priorities across teams, and build consistency while allowing appropriate judgment.

LEADERS PER COHORT	PROGRAM LENGTH	LIVE COHORT SESSIONS	PARTICIPANT HOURS

The Four Essential Jobs of Leading Through Others

01

Lead Through Other Managers

Shift from directly managing individual contributors to creating clarity, expectations, and accountability through other leaders. Strengthen the ability to coach managers without taking the work back.

02

Translate Priorities Into Team Execution

Turn broader priorities into clear expectations, decisions, operating rhythms, and tradeoffs across teams. Help managers connect day-to-day work to what matters most.

03

Develop Management Capability

Build stronger managers below you through coaching, feedback, observation, and clear standards. Distinguish development needs from performance issues and intervene early when leadership practice is weak.

04

Lead Across Teams and Boundaries

Strengthen cross-functional judgment, alignment, escalation, and decision authority across a broader span of responsibility. Create consistency where it matters while preserving appropriate local judgment.

Built for the Realities of Leading Through Others

For private cohorts, Corework begins with sponsor discovery to understand the leadership population, the managers they oversee, the priorities they are translating, and the operating conditions shaping their work. Examples, cases, and application are tailored to that context while the core Leading Through Others curriculum remains consistent.

What the Organization Receives

- Four facilitated live cohort sessions
- Participant tools and application resources
- Structured workplace practice between sessions
- Contextual tailoring based on sponsor discovery

Sponsor Insight

- End-of-cohort sponsor readout
- Recurring leadership and execution challenges
- Observations on where leaders may need more support or clearer expectations
- A repeatable development experience for leaders of managers

WHERE LEVEL II FITS

Leading Through Others can be deployed on its own for experienced managers and leaders of managers, or paired with Level I to create a clearer progression from first-line management into broader leadership responsibility.

Enterprise Leadership

Build the judgment, cross-functional influence, talent leadership, and enterprise perspective required as leadership scope expands.

At the enterprise level, leadership development becomes more dependent on the organization's strategy, structure, leadership expectations, and the specific population involved. For that reason, Level III is not offered as a fixed curriculum. Corework works with the sponsor to shape the experience around the leadership transitions and enterprise responsibilities that matter most.

Typical Areas of Focus

- Enterprise judgment and decision-making beyond functional expertise
- Cross-functional influence and leadership across organizational boundaries
- Talent leadership, succession, and building leadership capability across the enterprise
- Leading through complexity, competing priorities, and organizational change
- Translating enterprise strategy into clearer priorities, decisions, and operating expectations

Level III is customized to the organization's leaders, enterprise priorities, and development needs. Format, duration, and investment are scoped with the sponsor.

Applied Development Across the Pathway

Across all three levels, the Leadership Pathway is designed around application, not content consumption. Participants use the tools and practices in their actual work, then return with real experience to examine. The repeated cycle is what turns development into practice.

Learn → Apply → Reflect → Adjust

The Corework Difference

Corework treats leadership as applied organizational capability. The work is tied to the decisions, conversations, and responsibilities leaders already carry. Private cohorts are tailored to the organization's context without turning every engagement into a completely bespoke curriculum-development project.

The goal is not simply to create leaders who know more about leadership. It is to build leaders who can lead.

Delivery and Investment

Levels I and II use a parallel cohort structure so organizations can create a consistent leadership-development experience across different transitions. Level III is scoped around the senior leadership population and the organization's enterprise needs.

Level I Managing People	12–15 new and emerging managers	Private virtual cohort: four live 2-hour sessions over four weeks. Sponsor discovery, tailoring, and sponsor readout included.	$38,000 / cohort
