

FOCUSED WORKFORCE & TALENT STRATEGY ENGAGEMENT

Workforce & Talent Strategy Intensive

Turn an important workforce or talent priority into a strategy you can act on.

Major workforce priorities often arrive before the organization has resolved what they actually require. Leaders may agree on the ambition while holding different views about the priorities, tradeoffs, ownership, or changes needed to make it real.

Corework works with senior leadership teams to turn consequential workforce and talent priorities into a focused strategy with clearer decisions, ownership, and a practical path forward.

What should we actually do, who owns it, and what has to change to make it work?

When the Priority Is Clear, but the Path Forward Isn't

A new business direction, AI initiative, workforce shift, skills-first talent challenge, or leadership mandate can create pressure to act before the underlying choices have been worked through.

Teams may be dealing with too many priorities, unclear ownership, competing assumptions, or broad goals that have not yet been translated into operating decisions.

This engagement may be a fit when:

- Leaders agree something needs to change but are not aligned on what comes first
- A major initiative needs a workforce or talent strategy underneath it
- Competing priorities or assumptions are making execution difficult
- Ownership, dependencies, or implementation requirements remain unclear
- A leadership team needs to make consequential choices before committing resources or launching the work

DECISIONS + PATH FORWARD

What Makes This an Intensive

The leadership session is the visible center of the engagement, but the work begins before the room convenes. Corework uses pre-work to surface assumptions, ownership questions, dependencies, and execution constraints so the leadership team can spend its time making decisions rather than discovering the problem in real time.

THE UNIT OF CHANGE IS THE ORGANIZATION

The Strategy Intensive is designed to help a leadership team make and own an organizational strategy. It is distinct from leadership development, where the primary unit of change is the individual leader.

The Corework Strategy Intensive Method

The intensive moves the team from broad intent to concrete choices. The exact issue changes; the decision work remains consistent.

01

Clarify the Priority

Make the business and workforce priority precise. What outcome matters? What problem are we solving? What is in scope, and what is not? Surface where leaders are using the same words but carrying different assumptions.

02

Surface the Choices

Identify the decisions and tradeoffs the strategy requires. What will the organization prioritize? What will it stop, sequence, defer, or deliberately not do? What capabilities and operating changes will the chosen direction require?

03

Align on Ownership

Make responsibility explicit. Clarify who owns key decisions, where authority sits, what dependencies cross functions, and which leaders are accountable for moving the strategy from intent into normal operating practice.

04

Build the Path Forward

Translate the choices into a practical sequence of actions. Identify immediate decisions, near-term priorities, key dependencies, open questions, and the conditions leadership needs to create for the strategy to hold.

What Corework Examines Before the Room Convenes

The pre-work is a focused alignment and ownership scan. It is not a full organizational diagnostic. Its purpose is to make the leadership session more consequential by identifying where the important differences, assumptions, and unresolved choices sit.

The Priority What business or workforce outcome is driving the work, and how clearly is it currently defined?	Current Assumptions Where do leaders agree, where do they differ, and what tradeoffs have not yet been made explicit?
Ownership & Dependencies Who currently owns the work, what decisions cross functions, and where is responsibility or authority unclear?	Execution Conditions What capabilities, manager practices, systems, resources, or measures may need to change for the strategy to work?

What Client Participation Looks Like

Corework Typically Needs

- A senior sponsor who can define the priority and convene the right leaders
- Access to relevant strategy, planning, workforce, or talent materials
- Targeted pre-session conversations with key stakeholders
- A leadership team prepared to make real choices and tradeoffs in the room

The Work May Also Include

- Review of existing workforce data or initiative plans
- Additional alignment conversations where ownership is distributed
- Follow-up working sessions on unresolved decisions
- Coordination with internal strategy, HR, transformation, or operating teams

What the Organization Receives

The engagement is designed to leave the leadership team with more than a well-facilitated conversation. Corework captures the choices made, the implications of those choices, and the path leadership has agreed to own.

Core Strategy Outputs

- Clear statement of the workforce or talent priority and intended outcomes
- Explicit strategic choices and tradeoffs
- Clearer ownership, responsibilities, and decision rights
- Defined implementation priorities and sequencing
- Key dependencies, risks, and unresolved decisions

Action Outputs

- Near-term actions and leadership commitments
- Capabilities, systems, or manager practices that may need to change
- Success measures or signals to track where appropriate
- Executive strategy memo or action roadmap capturing the agreed path forward
- Follow-up leadership review to confirm decisions and next steps

The result is greater clarity about what the organization will do, who will own it, and what has to happen next.

What the Strategy Memo Makes Explicit

What We Will Do The priorities and commitments leadership has chosen to pursue.	What We Will Not Do Tradeoffs, boundaries, and work that will be deferred, stopped, or kept out of scope.
Who Owns What Decision ownership, responsibilities, dependencies, and places where authority must be clearer.	What Happens Next The first actions, sequence, open decisions, and conditions required to move into implementation.

The Corework Difference

Strategy intensives can become useful conversations that produce little operating change. Corework designs the engagement around the decisions leadership must make and the conditions the organization will need to change after the session. The goal is a strategy that can survive outside the room.

WHERE THE DIAGNOSTIC FITS

Use the Workforce System Diagnostic when the organization knows something is not working but is not yet confident where the system is breaking. Use the Strategy Intensive when the priority is known and leadership needs to decide what to do, what comes first, and who owns the path forward.

WHERE LEVEL III FITS

Enterprise Leadership develops the judgment and capability of senior leaders. The Strategy Intensive works at the team and organization level to make a consequential workforce or talent strategy and translate it into coordinated action.

Engagement Details

1–2 Days	Pre-Work	Senior Team	1 Path
LEADERSHIP INTENSIVE	ALIGNMENT + OWNERSHIP SCAN	DECISION MAKERS IN ROOM	STRATEGY + NEXT STEPS

Typical Focused Scope

Typical focused engagement: approximately 4–6 weeks, including pre-work, leadership intensive, synthesis, and follow-up.

A focused Strategy Intensive is built around one consequential workforce or talent priority and one senior leadership team. The engagement combines pre-work, facilitation, synthesis, and a decision-ready strategy memo or roadmap.

What Is Included

- Sponsor kickoff and scope alignment
- Review of agreed strategy, planning, workforce, or talent materials
- Focused alignment and ownership scan with key stakeholders
- Custom design of the 1–2 day leadership intensive
- Facilitation of the senior leadership working session
- Post-session synthesis and executive strategy memo or roadmap
- Follow-up review of decisions and next steps

What May Be Scoped Separately

- Multiple business units, leadership teams, or strategic workstreams
- Expanded stakeholder research or data analysis
- Additional facilitated working sessions
- Implementation design or change activation support
- Ongoing advisory after the Intensive

Investment

Focused engagements begin at $55,000. Final investment reflects the workforce or talent priority in scope, organizational complexity, stakeholder involvement, and the depth of leadership working sessions and strategy development required. Broader cross-functional or enterprise engagements are scoped separately.

Expanded stakeholder research, additional leadership teams, deeper data analysis, implementation support, or multi-business-unit work may increase scope and investment.

WHAT IT IS NOT

This is not a generic strategy offsite, a training program, or a diagnostic disguised as a workshop. It is a focused advisory engagement designed to help senior leaders make consequential workforce or talent choices, assign ownership, and leave with a path they can act on.
